One night only, Portland State’s Graphic Design seniors show final portfolios and convey how “Everything Will Be Okay.”

On September 3rd, 2009 inside The Cleaners at the Ace Hotel, seventeen graduates from Portland State University’s Graphic Design program, which was recently dubbed a “gem” by the preeminent design publication, How Magazine (July/August issue), will exhibit their portfolios.

The Cleaners at the Ace Hotel is a renowned and well-respected gallery in the Pearl District of Portland. The show will take place on First Thursday, a popular night at the beginning of every month in which new art and artists are presented to Portlanders and visitors alike. Free food and music will be at the event.

Portland State’s Graphic Design senior show will display their unique perspectives in through a variety of mediums ranging from individual portfolio books, large scale poster pieces, packaging and much, much more. The theme of the show—“Everything Will Be Okay”—was chosen as a group by the participating seniors in order to recognize the challenges facing new graduates and the universality of change, especially poignant in our current economic and moral crisis. “Everything Will Be Okay” is about remaining positive, looking ahead while still aware of history, and supporting one another—this is what fresh designers entering the professional world strive to be conscious of and achieve.

Come see this new emerging talent September 3rd!
